

A Well-groomed Walk-in Keeping on trend

with Andrea

Make getting dressed fast and easy! Whether you have a walk-in closet or normal built-in wardrobe, the most important thing is organization in order to maximize space.

For a walk-in closet, it's important to divide the space by his/hers in order for both to have easy access without getting in each other's way. Set up zones! A low rod holds tops and skirts; an eye-level pole, dresses; and a high bar, shirts and suits.

Assign the high shelves for things you don't use all the time e.g. out of season items. Let seasonality and frequency of use be your guide in determining what to keep in the closet and what to stow elsewhere.

Visual Organization: hang garments by type and color! Blouses, for example, can be sorted first by sleeve length and then by shade.

Your closet will look neater if you use just one type of hanger—wood, wire, or plastic. Store bags, belts, ties, scarves, and other accessories in plain sight on hooks or racks, which can be attached to the inside of your closet door.

Use containers—consider a matching set of baskets—to hold accessories and clothing that can't be hung, such as socks and undergarments. Smaller baskets or boxes can store a single type of accessory, such as scarves or hats. We like Atlante Walk-in closet by EmmeBi. (see photo above)

Its leather upholstered drawers, pull-out shelves, and vitrine like glass doors makes this collection a luxuriously fabulous option in a home. The center island is also clever for additional storage space.
